

Internship

Description

The Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation offers one paid internship each summer to an undergraduate or graduate student who desires experience related to philanthropy, public policy, the nonprofit sector, advocacy and/or community service in North Carolina. The internship lasts for at least eight consecutive weeks during the summer; however, there is no specific starting date. The Foundation provides a stipend for this internship as well as an additional housing stipend if the intern does not live within commuting distance of Winston-Salem, NC.

Responsibilities

Interns have the opportunity to assist staff in researching projects that support the Foundation's long-term goals related to its focus areas: Community Economic Development, Strengthening Democracy, the Environment, Public Education, and Social Justice & Equity. They are also welcome to pursue projects of personal interest. Interns shadow staff, attend conferences and meetings, and participate in the overall activities of the Foundation. The internship provides a unique opportunity for a student to explore his/her interests and inform future career pathways.

Eligibility

Residents or natives of North Carolina and/or students attending accredited colleges or universities in the state are eligible to apply. Further qualifications include:

- Demonstrated interest in philanthropy, nonprofits, public policy, advocacy and/or community service.
- Strong communication and writing skills
- Sense of responsibility and personal initiative
- Willingness to support the Foundation through intensive research projects

Students of color are encouraged to apply.
